

While most can agree that the overall goal of any transportation system should be to develop a working line that serves all communities, is efficient, and safe and affordable for all. But we also need to consider it as an opportunity-

An opportunity to specifically integrate ROWs into the community in a way that will engender identity and create a connectivity between the different areas and uses that will build and support local economies and draw a diverse population.

An opportunity to foster frequent and meaningful contact and to give people of Los Angeles a feeling of interconnection.

An opportunity to use sustainable green infrastructure to teach all of us about respect and appreciation for our natural environment.

We look to the past to create our future. A future that can be more sustainable, visually stimulating and ultimately- a more livable city.
